FESS, IN SPEECH, SOUNDS NOTE OF G. O. P. FOR 1928

Republicans Will Appeal For Votes on Prosperity
Issue

"CAL" NOT MENTIONED

President Lauded, However,
In Keynote Speech of Senator

By George R. Holmes
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
CONVENTION HALL, KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 12.—The Republicans are going to the country in the 1928 campaign on the issue of general prosperity—and if Calvin Coolidge should be persuaded to again carry the standard so much the better.

This was the keynote sounded here today by Senator Simeon D. Fess of Ohio, in opening the Republican National Convention, which is beset with bitter and acrimonious struggles over candidates and platform.

Senator Fess did not actually propose the nomination of Mr. Coolidge but neither did he take him out of consideration—he merely left wide open the door to the draft movement, should the convention desire to walk through it, by saying that Mr. Coolidge "appeared" to be set upon retiring, and that many of his friends believed so.

Mr. Coolidge's name was not mentioned by the Ohio keynoter until near the end of his long address. Then, after words of praise such as few conventions have listened to regarding any president save Lincoln, Senator Fess closed with this:

"I once said, and I now repeat my statement. Few are his words, decisive his judgments. His comprehension of problems is broad, his vision clear, and his action dauntless. His conception of public duty forestalls the employment of mere political expediency. He spurns the arts of the demagogue, and strengthens the passion of public rectitude. He is more concerned in directing the public mind in proper channels than in following public clamor based upon propaganda. He yields not to threats, nor is he persuaded by cajolery. His evident desire to do justice to all stimulates public confidence. He shields no wrong, nor denies no right. His sense of fairness provokes support and disarms attack.

"After five years and seven months of leadership in our nation, he leaves office by his own fiat, which appears to be final and is so interpreted by many of his friends in spite of the fact that his nomination and election would be a foregone conclusion did he not forbid.

"This hold upon the confidence of the American people of every name, class and creed, without regard to partisan feeling, makes Calvin Coolidge the greatest personal and political force in the world today."

Senator Fess studiously avoided mentioning prohibition by name, but he made it clear that the Republican party is a dry party. His allusion to prohibition was veiled but pointed, in that section of his speech devoted to "law enforcement." After calling for more universal respect for the law, he said:

"No backward step can be tolerated upon whatever pretext which would permit a noisy minority to exploit the great mass of our population. All over the earth, led by our own example, there has burst into national consciousness the conviction that this policy and program of human conservation must not be scuttled.

"It is not a question of tolerance or of liberty, but of life, both individual and national. The Republican party is ready to call the roll on this false doctrine masquerading under the mask of liberty. It is ready to sound the moral tocsin against the present campaign of noise-making minority whether in the interest of business, profit or mere human indulgence. It stands for respect for law. It condemns the violation of law."

Senator Fess made it emphatically clear that the party is willing to stand or fall on the record of the Coolidge administration, and in this connection he rebuked the farm rebels in the party by approving the sentiments expressed in Mr. Coolidge's veto of the McNary-Haugen bill. He echoed a number of the president's veto arguments, and at the same time highly praised the administration's agricultural record, which, he said, contained "the enactment of no less than 24 separate pieces of constructive and remedial legislation covering every phase of the agricultural problem."

But it was upon the prosperous condition of the country since the Republicans returned to power years ago that the Ohio Senator placed most emphasis.

"Today," he said, "we are in the longest period of sustained business prosperity in our history."

Going into details, then, Senator Fess sketched the business depression that immediately followed the war, dwelt upon the enormous public debt and the burdensome high taxes, the disarrangement of the whole economic and business structure of the country, and asserted that the Repub-

CAN HOOVER BE STOPPED?

Big Question Facing Republican Delegates at Kansas City
As National Convention Opens—Proverbial 'Slip' May Happen

By George R. Holmes
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
KANSAS CITY, June 12.—Can Hoover be stopped?

This is the question mark of the Republican National Convention which met here today to select from a field of a dozen candidates the 1928 nominee—and possibly, of course, the next President of the United States.

It is Hoover against the field. Of that there can be no doubt. Possessed of more delegates than any other candidate, in fact, nearly twice as many; backed by enough members of the Coolidge administration as almost to justify describing him as "the administration candidate;" and supported by an organization which for efficiency and resourcefulness cannot be matched by any of his rivals, the surface indications all point to a Hoover victory.

However, the old adage about the slip 'twixt the cup and the lip has convention stage at any time and assume mortal proportions. It will most certainly stalk forth if the hard-pressed and bitter allies succeed in their plan to checkmate Hoover. In that event it is not at all unlikely that the party leaders will suddenly rediscover that Mr. Coolidge, after all, never did say positively that he would not accept a nomination were it offered him; he merely said he didn't choose to run.

Broadly speaking, Hoover goes into this convention with enough votes in sight to nominate him. Hunters, however, have often sighted game that eluded them. There are 1089 votes in the convention. To nominate requires 545. Hoover will have roughly 400 votes, excluding Pennsylvania and New York, on the first or second ballots.

From this it is apparent that the powerful New York and Pennsylvania delegations, with 90 and 79 delegates respectively, hold the whip-hand in the convention. If thrown to Hoover they can undoubtedly put him across easily; denied him and he faces defeat. Neither delegation is irrevocably committed; each is what is technically known as "uninstructed."

First Four Ballots

If Hoover is not nominated within four ballots, the opinion of many shrewd observers is that he will not be nominated at all. For the opposition is strong, it is bitter, and if it can hold the line for four ballots with all of the attendant pressure after the first one, then it is wholly likely the line can be held indefinitely. There are among the Hoover delegates probably 100 that can be described as fluid—that is, they are for Hoover if he appears he can be nominated; if appears he cannot, then these delegates are going to seek a new bandwagon to climb on, and that immediately.

Consequently, the strategy of the Hoover leaders is to "do it quick." By the same token, the strategy of the opposition is "hold the line fast;" hold it anywhere just so it is short of 545.

The candidacy of Frank O. Lowden of Illinois, is next in line. Supported by the figure of Vice-President Charles G. Dawes in the background, Lowden is figured to have in excess of 200 votes on the first ballot, and there are believed sufficient reserves in the Lowden books to bring his total to above 300 whenever his managers choose to call them out.

Moreover, nearly all this Lowden strength is the kind that will stick. Recruited mainly from the great grain belt which extends from Ohio to the Rockies, the Lowden is the Richard of that Crusade.

CASEYS HAND DEFEAT TO INDEPENDENT NINE

FINAL SCORE — 7 TO 12

By George R. Holmes

The Caseys won their second game of the season here last night when they handed the Independents their fourth straight defeat of the current season by score of 7 to 12. By their defeat the Independents are now in a deadlock with A. O. H. for the cellar position. McCarty was winning pitcher and pitched good ball after he relieved Rodgers.

"Bud" David starred with the stick, making two out of two. "Danny" McDevitt made a clean steal of the plate in the third.

Rodgers blanked the Independents in the first. Piazza was safe when Coyle dropped his fly. Piazza was caught off first and put out. D. Rodgers to J. Rodgers. Greco flied to J. Rodgers. J. Rodgers to Sackville retired S. Lasprella.

The Knights jumped into the lead in their first. After McGee fanned, Coyle hit to S. Lasprella, who misjudged. E. McDevitt forced Coyle at second. Tranotti to Piazza. McDevitt went to second unmolested. D. Rodgers' single scored McDevitt, but Rodgers was caught off first and tagged out, Tranotti to Romeo. (Continued on Page Four)

Joseph R. Grundy Named To Committee

By Pennsylvania Convention Delegates

(By George R. Holmes, I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

KANSAS CITY, June 12, 1928.—The nomination of Herbert Hoover to the Republican National Convention here became as nearly certain today as anything political can be.

The big delegation from Pennsylvania and Massachusetts were both put definitely into the Hoover column by action of delegation caucuses and this pushes Hoover's pledged strength considerably past the 545 nominating mark. Two of the most powerful figures in this convention, Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon and William M. Butler, chairman of the National Committee, spoke the words that assured victory for Hoover. Butler told his Massachusetts delegates that he would vote for Hoover, and said: "That, I am satisfied, will meet with the approval of our President."

At the same time, Secretary Mellon was counselling 75 Pennsylvanians in a similar vein across the street. Secretary Mellon said, when he made his statement in Philadelphia a few weeks ago to the effect that of all candidates that had presented themselves, Hoover came nearest to the Coolidge pattern, but he was still hopeful that Coolidge might be prevailed upon to stand again. "Now, however, it has become clear that he will not do so. It therefore seems wise to look for another who will best carry forward the policies of the present administration which have won the wholehearted approval of the American people."

"As I said in Philadelphia, Hoover seems, of all candidates, to best measure up to the highest standards that we have set, and my suggestion to my colleagues is that we vote for him on the first ballot."

There was a record roll call in the Pennsylvania delegation which resulted in 79 affirmative votes and not a single dissenter.

The first business of the Pennsylvania caucus was the election of Joseph R. Grundy, of Bristol, to the convention committee, made to notify the President. Mr. Grundy then offered a resolution demanding an upward revision of tariff rates to be incorporated in the national platform. It was unanimously adopted. Secretary of Labor Davis and Senator Reed spoke in behalf of it. "There would have been no unemployment in this country if we had had a tariff that protected industries," said Davis.

Gets Jail Term When He Does Not Pay His Taxes

A Bristol man was sentenced to jail yesterday for the non-payment of taxes for the year 1927.

George Green, Second Ward, like numerous other men and women about town, had not paid his 1927 taxes, and when the police visited him with a demand for payment of the delinquent taxes he still refused to make payment.

Green was taken into custody and lodged in the municipal jail, but still refused, and after being given another opportunity to pay, and refusing, he was finally sentenced to the county jail, Doylestown, there to wait until he agrees to make payment.

Police are still active in the collection of taxes, and due warning is given that unless delinquent taxes are paid that those refusing will be given a jail term.

It was his fourth time before the court on various charges. It is claimed that a boy purchased liquor in his store and that Green afterwards asked the boy to change his testimony. Webster Achey as his counsel.

With two court rooms in operation the June term of civil and equity court opened yesterday with Judge William C. Ryan presiding and Judge Samuel E. Shull, of Stroudsburg, sitting as associated judge.

In Court No. 1 there was some miscellaneous business presented before any civil case was called. L. D. Gilbert, proprietor of the Rocky Ridge Hotel, and his wife, Mrs. Clara Gilbert, who were refused new trials by Judge Ryan in an opinion handed down, were brought before the Court for sentence.

Gilbert, who was before the court on a bawdy house charge on May 5, 1927, and was sentenced at that time, was sentenced this morning on a similar charge to pay a fine of $100 and costs and serve one year in the Bucks County Prison. His wife received a sentence of three months and was fined $100 and costs. She, too, was before the court in 1927.

Harry E. Grim, Perkaskie, attorney for the Gilberts, said the case would be appealed to the Superior Court. Pending the appeal the Gilberts were released under bail.

VACATION THOUGHTS

At this time of the year this is a nation with but a single thought—vacation.

Independence Day will find vacation time in full swing. And during the succeeding two months a large percentage of the people of the United States will have their annual summer furlough from the cares and labors of making a living.

For some the vacation will be a week, or perhaps only a day. A larger number will drop their tools for fifteen days. A few more fortunate ones will extend their playtime over a month, two months or three months.

The vacation is an all-revealing barometer of prosperity. There is no other country in the world where wage earners and workers for small salaries can afford the luxury of a vacation trip, which is expensive and enjoyed at the additional expense of loss of earnings during the period of absence from work.

American workers are so little the slaves of that machine called industry and business and have so little craving for gold for its own sake that they collectively forfeit hundreds of millions of wage and salary dollars for the sake of a vacation tour or sojourn.

Since the war the vacation has approached universality among salaried workers in the United States. Most office and store employees get a week or fifteen days with pay. But the fact that he gets no pay while away does not deprive the skilled wage earner of his motor trip, plunge in the surf or camping party.

RADIO IN THE CAMPAIGN

In 1924 the radio enabled thousands to sense the futility of the wrangling at Madison Square Garden. Through it many felt the spirit of harmony that prevailed in Cleveland. In that presidential campaign Calvin Coolidge and John W. Davis addressed unseen audiences that numbered into the millions. The privilege of seeing the rival candidates was denied to many, but all could hear their voices.

Eight years ago the radio was first used in a presidential election when a Pittsburgh station broadcast the results of the Harding-Cox election. That was a pioneering event. This year radio will play an extremely important part in the campaign.

The conventions in Kansas City and Houston and subsequently the campaigners will reach many millions by radio. One hundred radio stations will be linked in broadcasting networks that will carry the proceedings in the convention cities to every state and community in the United States. In addition, two high-powered short-wave stations will keep South America, Europe, Asia, Australia and New Zealand in touch with the conventions. It will require more than 15,000 miles of telephone wires to effect this vast radio hook-up. There will be a battery of microphones on the speakers' platform and others near the bands that will enliven the dull sessions of the conventions. More microphones will pick up the cheers and jeers, the roars and even the whispers of the party hosts. And announcers will tell the story as it is enacted before their eyes.

Another fine thing about rural life is that you can't hear the neighbor's daughters cultivating their musical talent.

SYNOPSIS

Buckwell, San Francisco boss, seeks to secure valuable Vasquez ranch by guile and force. His lawyer's nephew, Terry, loves Dolores Vasquez and helps save the ranch. Buckwell tries in vain to wreck their love affair. Old Vasquez dies as result of Buckwell's persecution. Dolores and Terry disclose Buckwell as a Chinaman in effort to avenge Vasquez's death, but are kidnapped by Buckwell and held prisoners.

Chapter XVI—Continued

"We will not talk of him!" observed Buckwell with curt finality. His eyes, that had been scrutinizing her so absorbingly, noticed the exquisite jade piece presented by Lu Fong. It made a gorgeous big blotch of green against Dolores' black gown. Buckwell drew in his breath sharply. "There is only one man in Frisco who has jade like that—Lu Fong—the damnable trouble maker! His eyes narrowed angrily, and, rising quickly, he snatched it from Dolores' neck and tossed it contemptuously to Jimmy and the Texas Kid, who stood dutifully in the background waiting for their chief's next orders.

They examined the exquisitely carved stone, snapped it in two, and each took half. The jade recarved, together with the bag of gold Buckwell had given them to divide, made their night's profit good pickings. They were more than satisfied.

"Stay where you are, my proud, brave girl."

Turning back to Dolores with a suave smile, Buckwell indicated the floor overhead. "In the chamber above," he said, "wait those to whom you told a certain story last night."

Dolores' eyes lighted up with hope. She felt that if Lu Fong had come to capture Buckwell there would be a chance for her deliverance and an opportunity to find out about Terry.

Noting her suppressed excitement, Buckwell continued: "It won't do you any good! You are now about to find it your duty to tell these same yellow gentlemen that your accusations regarding me were false."

Buckwell paused for effect, but it was not necessary. Dolores was agitated at his audacity. Nevertheless, an unconscious sigh escaped her lips. It was a relief to know why she had been kidnapped and if Buckwell wanted her to again face the Tong men he would probably require Terry's presence, too, which meant they had not killed him.

Dolores smiled nervously. It was the only vent she dared give her relief. But her thoughts were absorbed in trying to devise some plan to elude Buckwell's hypnotic eye and get out of his underground den. She was fully determined not to play into his hand by lying. The whole purpose of the trip that had developed into a series of hideous experiences was to wreak vengeance upon Buckwell, not to do favors for him.

"When you are brought in to face the Tong leaders," continued Buckwell, glaring at her menacingly, "I want you to swear that your statement about me was merely the delusion of a grief-stricken brain."

Dolores returned Buckwell's gaze in silent, contemptuous defiance. "Is that clear?" he asked loudly. "You understand what you are to do?"

Buckwell was accustomed to being obeyed, and Dolores was not accustomed to such rude insistence. It was a bad combination.

"I will not say that!" Her determined voice gave no indication of the fear that engulfed her. Her beautiful young lips were curled in scorn.

"You are proud, aren't you?" taunted Buckwell, with a forced laugh. "Why are you Spanish Vasquez superior to the rest of us? Lull!" He answered himself as Dolores stood erect, with angry eyes flashing dangerously. "You're no better than I am, except that your noble family faces death bravely. We will see if you are as fine and courageous as you think." He stood before her and said slowly, "There is something you will not face so coldly!"

Afraid of being touched, Dolores retreated to the other side of a large chair and watched Buckwell with eyes of terror.

Turning quickly to Jimmie and the Texas Kid, he said, "Bring him in!"

As they disappeared behind a large manifold screen a blood curdling yell filled the room. Dolores screamed aloud in terror and her heart almost stopped beating.

It was the dwarf. He had been listening intently to every word and yelled out in wild excitement to make Dolores look in his direction.

She did, and recoiled in panic at the sight of his hideous face and twisted body leering at her from the barred cage in the wall. "Shut up!" said Buckwell in a stern voice, hurling a book in his direction.

It fell on the floor, but that did not matter; it had served to silence the dwarf. However, he continued to listen and watch, not missing anything that transpired in the shrine room. His powers of observation were keen and he knew more about his renegade brother's affairs and the workings of the underground doors than the latter imagined.

The scuffling of feet drew Dolores' attention to the other side of the room. Not knowing what to expect, but hoping against hope it was the men returning with Terry, she whirled about.

"Terry!" she cried, with a mingling of relief and love, and rushed toward him impulsively.

"Stay where you are, my proud, brave girl," said Buckwell, grasping her wrist in a vice-like grip that hurt and infuriated her.

It would do Dolores no good to speak, and Terry was incapable of utterance. Still bound and gagged, he looked at her with a world of questions, misgivings and love in his pain-filled eyes. His mouth was bleeding. There was a cruel gash on his forehead that had not had attention. His clothes were dusty, bloody and matted. Her heart went out to him in compassion. She thanked God that he was alive and longed to do something to relieve his suffering.

Buckwell seemed to derive a cruel satisfaction from watching the young lovers' anguish. It was his revenge for the thrashing Terry had given him at the Crystal Palace, but his merciless brain suddenly decided the score was not yet even and he gave a quiet order to Jimmie, then drew back and watched Dolores.

The man threw Terry on his face. Jimmie took his neck, the Texas Kid grasped his feet, and they began bending him backward with brutal steadiness.

Terry's face turned livid red and moist from the pain.

The dwarf screamed and rattled the bars of his prison.

"Stop! Stop! Oh, don't!" cried Dolores in anguish, and, rushing to Terry, threw herself on the floor beside him and tried to touch his face with loving hands.

"Let him go!" she screamed, and in reaching up tried to push Jimmie away. She even clawed frantically at his hands, but he paid no attention to her entreaties and continued the slow pull backward that was almost tearing Terry's muscles from bones that could not stand much more strain.

"Make them stop!" entreated Dolores, appealing to Buckwell with tear-filled eyes.

"So—you are afraid of death, aren't you?" commented Buckwell, with a calm smile.

"Oh, you—you cruel beast!" sobbed Dolores. "Please, please make them stop! They'll kill him!"

"That will do," Buckwell raised his voice and motioned his men to desist.

They released Terry, and he writhed on the floor in agony.

"Well," inquired Buckwell threateningly of Dolores, "will you tell the Tong men above what I wish or shall we continue to prepare your young man for his grave?"

"Oh!" Dolores groaned in mental torment and pressed icy cold fingers against her throbbing temples. She knew that if she obeyed Buckwell by lying to the Tong leaders Terry would be safe, but her Grandfather's death would go unavenged. She was the last of the Vasquezes and had taken a sacred oath beside her Grandfather's dead body to uphold the honor of their name. She could not do it by lying. While, on the other hand, she could not endure being responsible for Terry's murder. She loved him, and he was all she had in the world.

"Oh, dear God—dear God," she prayed, "what shall I do?" (To be continued.)
